Hyperborea

Hyperborea is a Greek name literally meaning 'Beyond the Boreas' but which particularly referred to 'The land from which the North Wind blows'. Boreas is the Greek name for the North Wind and so, taken literally, it could be said (and was said by some) that this was a reference to the North Pole of the planet, although there is no actual land there. The name originates, however, from the mystery schools and refers to the Greek creation myth of Nyx and Boreas.

In this myth, Nyx danced southwards, thereby whirling Erebus, the Darkness, into the North Wind, Boreas, that followed her. Where Nyx started from is the place of origin, the centre or source. The land or place beyond the North Wind is, therefore, the place of origin, the centre or source from which the wind originates.

In Greek mythology, the North Wind is a synonym for the Creative Wind or Holy Breath (i.e. Holy Spirit). Hyperborea is thus a name for the source of the North Wind or Holy Breath. Metaphysically speaking, this means the heart of God or heart of the Universe—the centre that is everywhere within a circumference that is nowhere.

In the body this centre is associated with the alta-major chakra—the 'gateway' by means of which the Holy Breath is breathed from the heart of God into the heart chakra of the human body, thus inspiring us and giving us life. This movement of the spiritual breath from the alta-major chakra (associated with the nape of the neck and brainstem) to the heart chakra is, symbolically, southwards, and echoes the movement of Nyx and Boreas. In other words, in terms of the individual body (human or planetary), the alta major chakra is Hyperborea, whilst the Golden Egg laid by Nyx, from which Eros is hatched, refers to the heart chakra.

The connection between the heart and alta-major chakras, and between the alta-major chakra and the higher or more universal heart chakra, is contained in the traditional Madonna and Child symbolism and iconography, wherein the child has his alta-major chakra on the heart chakra of the mother. It is also contained in the story of the Last Supper, wherein the disciple John laid his head upon the breast (i.e. heart) of Jesus.

The British Isles

It is for this reason that the British Isles were equated by the Greeks and Romans with Hyperborea, the land in the North from which the North Wind blows—the land from which Apollo, the Sun God, originates: for the British Isles equate with the alta major chakra of the planet.

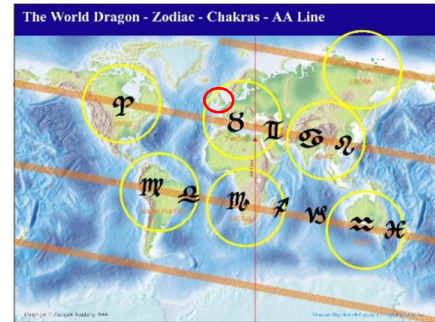

Thus the British Isles are referred to in myth as Europa or Maia, both names associated with the Pleiades, which symbolise the alta-major chakra. Maia ('Mother') is synonymous with Mary. She is the mother of the Christ child, known also as Eros, Mercury or Hermes. Hence also why the British Isles are referred to as 'the Dowry of Mary' in Christian Catholic tradition—the land having always being associated with the goddess or queen in ancient tradition.

It is almost certainly because of this role that the British Isles plays in the world chakra system that it was chosen as the place to which the God-men from other spheres and planets first came 18 million years ago to anchor the Ancient Wisdom—a wisdom that still lies buried deep within its landscape, waiting to be rediscovered, re-awoken.

Arthur

The story of these God-men or Masters from other planets, who came on planetary rays as teachers and guardians of evolving humanity, is contained in the mythology of Arthur (Ar-Thor) and his Knights of the Round Table and their feminine counterparts. Arthur is the ancient mythical Hyperborean King, representative of the Sun King or Solar Logos. His teachers are Merlin and Morgana, the Arch-Priests of a yet higher evolution and the personifications of the Holy Breath of Wisdom. To rediscover and reawaken the wisdom that lies buried in Hyperborea/British Isles is synonymous with reawakening the Spirit of Arthur.
